Table 5: Key Partnerships & Announcements

4. Event Impact on Stock Price

4.1. Analysis of Key Events

The events below trace Infosys’s trajectory from acquisition-driven optimism to a broader market reassessment driven by weak guidance and macro headwinds.

InSemi Acquisition (January 2024). Infosys acquired InSemi Technology, a semiconductor design firm, for Rs. 280 crore. The strategic rationale was clear: the global AI chip boom was accelerating, and semiconductor design capability gave Infosys a credible “Chip-to-Cloud” narrative. Brokerages rated the immediate impact as Neutral, and the stock drifted ~1% lower in the days following execution. The market’s verdict was that strategic positioning is promising, but revenue contribution from this segment had yet to materialise.

Dual US Acquisitions — Optimum Healthcare IT & Stratus Global (March 2026). Infosys committed approximately $560 million across two US-based firms: Optimum Healthcare IT (digital transformation for hospital networks) and Stratus Global (insurance-sector IT). The combined Rs. 4,200 crore outlay pushed the stock up about 1% in early trading on the announcement day, but it settled flat by close. Analysts were broadly supportive of the long-term logic — healthcare and insurance are sticky, high-margin verticals — yet were explicit that these deals would take multiple quarters to feed through to earnings. The flat price reaction reflected precisely that delay being priced in.

Q4 FY 2024 Earnings Beat (+7.1% EPS Surprise). This was one of Infosys’s cleanest quarters in the recent cycle. Disciplined cost management combined with strong top-line execution produced an EPS 7.1% ahead of the Street’s estimate — a magnitude of outperformance rare enough in a large-cap IT name to attract meaningful institutional buying. The stock responded with a 5–6% jump over the following sessions.

Q2 FY 2025 Earnings Miss (–4.7% EPS Surprise). The Q2 result unwound much of the goodwill from Q4 FY 2024. A 4.7% EPS miss — compounded by slowing discretionary IT spending and global macro headwinds — sent the stock down approximately 5–6%. The miss also reignited debate over whether Infosys’s FY 2025 revenue growth guidance was achievable, adding further pressure.

FY 2026 Full-Year Results — Revenue Guidance Disappointment. The FY 2026

annual results delivered a split verdict. EPS of US$0.81 beat analyst estimates by 1.9%, and net income grew 4.9% to US$3.31 billion. However, the forward guidance for the next financial year — revenue growth of just 1.5%–3.5% — fell well short of expectations and lagged the broader Indian IT sector’s 6.2% growth forecast by a wide margin. While the stock gained on the EPS beat, the weak guidance capped the upside and kept the stock range-bound. This guidance number, more than any single quarter, has been the primary structural drag on Infosys’s share price through 2025 and into 2026.

Overall trend: Over the past year, Infosys shares have declined 23.67%, trading within a 52-week range of Rs. 1,089 to Rs. 1,728. The slide reflects three concurrent pressures: AI-driven disruption compressing demand for traditional IT services, sequentially weak quarterly results, and a global macro slowdown prompting enterprises to defer discretionary technology spending.

| Event                            | Before    | After     | Change | Driver                                  |

| InSemi acquisition (Jan 2024)    | Rs. 1,540 | Rs. 1,525 | −1.0%  | Market awaiting revenue proof           |
| Dual US acquisitions (Mar 2026)  | Rs. 1,595 | Rs. 1,595 | Flat   | Long-term play; no near-term trigger    |
| Q4 FY 2024 earnings beat (+7.1%) | Rs. 1,450 | Rs. 1,530 | +5.5%  | Strong margins; rare EPS outperformance |
| Q2 FY 2025 earnings miss (−4.7%) | Rs. 1,900 | Rs. 1,790 | −5.8%  | Weak guidance; macro headwinds          |
| FY 2026 full-year results        | Rs. 1,590 | Rs. 1,640 | +3.1%  | EPS beat offset by weak revenue outlook |
